Some Aerodynamic Properties of a 105mm Model of the 155mm T-358 Shell Oct 31 2019 The aerodynamic properties of a 105 mm model of the 155 mm T-358 shell are discussed. Subsonically, at small yaw, the model has a serious case of dynamic instability as indicated by a rapid divergence of the precessional component of yaw. It is shown that this instability is due to Magnus effects, and that these effects cannot be circumvented by firing at a different spin. However, because of past experience with similar shell, it is conjectured that this dynamic instability is a small yaw phenomenon and that a limit cycle is present. As a consequence of this, the dispersion will not be markedly affected.

Small Boats, Weak States, Dirty Money Jul 09 2020 Many believe that pirates and other water-bound terrorists present a significant threat to international maritime security. Testing the validity of this claim, Martin N. Murphy scrutinizes recent incidents of maritime terrorism and locates the commonalities between pirates and maritime terrorists that enable them to commit their extensive crimes. Murphy's research opens up surprising sites of contact between pirates and wider criminal networks, organizations that pursue their corrupt agendas not only on sea but also on land. It is these relationships, Murphy argues, that bring about the destabilization of states and regions in which piracy occurs. Murphy's most significant revelation is the way in which maritime criminality may disguise insurgent and terrorist activity, allowing such actors greater freedom to maneuver. Although these acts currently rank as a low-level threat, piracy feeds off of political upheaval. Before they can evolve into a truly powerful and dangerous force, however, maritime terrorists and insurgents will have to overcome significant operational and technical issues. They must also capture the attention of an international audience by committing atrocities at sea that are as devastating as those committed on land.

British or American English? Nov 12 2020 Speakers of British and American English display some striking differences in their use of grammar. In this detailed survey, John Algeo considers questions such as: •Who lives on a street, and who lives in a street? •Who takes a bath, and who has a bath? •Who says Neither do I, and who says Nor do I? •After 'thank you', who says Not at all and who says You're welcome? •Whose team are on the ball, and whose team isn't? Containing extensive quotations from real-life English on both sides of the Atlantic, collected over the past twenty years, this is a clear and highly organized guide to the differences - and the similarities - between the grammar of British and American speakers. Written for those with no prior knowledge of linguistics, it shows how these grammatical differences are linked mainly to particular words, and provides an accessible account of contemporary English in use.
